

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN-MADISON - DISCRIMINATION

Establish a 14 member faculty panel to help UW students meet the problems of race relations.

68-5/17 lat 2 + sent + sent * 2

Special Race Relations Unit Set Up at UW

Madison, Wis. - UPI - The University of Wisconsin announced Thursday that it has set up a special faculty committee to find ways to meet problems of race relations.

Chancellor William H. Sewell of the Madison campus named Prof. Wilson B. Thiede of the curriculum and instruction department to head the 14 member group.

Sewell asked the committee to outline what can be done with existing courses and through "development of new courses or other ways of dealing in depth with important problems of our time."

"For a long time, most thinking people have been concerned about questions of race relations in America," Sewell said, "but it has never been easy to convert that concern into action."

"Because black people make up a disproportionate share of the poor in this country, I am sure your group will find itself looking at broader issues of poverty and urban problems as well as race relations," he said.

Wisconsin Spaceman Injured

Madison, Wis. -UPI- A bone fracture at the base of his spine has temporarily halted training of a former University of Wisconsin astronomer as an astronaut, it was reported here Thursday. Robert A. Parker, 31, was named an astronaut last August by the national aeronautics and space administration.

FR MAY 17 1968

UW Creates Race Relations Unit

Madison, Wis. -UPI- The University of Wisconsin announced Thursday that it has set up a special faculty committee to find ways to meet problems of race relations. Chancellor William H. Sewell of the Madison campus named Prof. Wilson B. Thiede to head the 14 member group.

UW to Explore Study of Races

Journal Special Correspondence
Madison, Wis. - The University of Wisconsin Thursday announced the establishment of a 14 member faculty panel to help UW students meet the problems of race relations.

"For a long time most thinking people have been concerned about questions of race relations in America," William Sewell, Madison campus chancellor, said in a letter to the 14. "But it has never been easy to convert that concern into action."

Sewell asked the 14 members to outline what could be done within existing courses and through the "development of new courses or other ways of dealing in depth with important problems of our time."

Letterman?